Weekly client pipeline review

WHEN TO USE

Every Monday morning.

THE PROMPT

Act as a freelance business coach. Here is my current pipeline: [PASTE: prospects, proposals, active projects, invoices with statuses]. Review it and tell me: (1) the single highest-leverage action this week, (2) which proposal is most likely to close and why, (3) which client is most at risk and why, (4) what to automate or delegate. Be blunt, no flattery.

CUSTOMIZE

Keep a simple text log of your pipeline to paste in.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A 5-minute Monday review that sets the week.

Ideal client profile

WHEN TO USE

Before any outreach sprint.

THE PROMPT

Build me an ideal client profile for [MY SERVICE]. Include: industries that need this most, company size, the person I should talk to, the top 3 problems they feel daily, the words they use to describe those problems, where they hang out online, and the #1 objection they'll have to hiring me. Based on this, write 5 opening lines for outreach messages.

CUSTOMIZE

Answer from real experience, not guesses.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A targeting sheet that stops you spraying messages everywhere.

Outreach sprint - 10 personalized messages

WHEN TO USE

When you have 10 real prospects.

THE PROMPT

Here are 10 prospects with one line each about them: [PASTE LIST]. For each, write a 3-sentence cold message: sentence 1 names something specific about them/their business, sentence 2 connects it to one thing I do, sentence 3 asks one small question. No templates, no 'I hope this finds you well'. Vary the openings so no two sound alike.

CUSTOMIZE

Research each prospect for 5 minutes before running this.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

10 messages that each feel written for one person.

Discovery call -> proposal summary

WHEN TO USE

After every discovery call.

THE PROMPT

Here are my raw notes from a discovery call with [CLIENT]: [PASTE NOTES]. Produce: (1) a 5-line summary of what they need, (2) their stated goal and their real goal, (3) the 3 questions I should still answer before proposing, (4) a proposed scope outline with deliverables. Flag anything they said that contradicts the brief.

CUSTOMIZE

Paste your notes right after the call - don't let them cool.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A call summary that makes the proposal 10x faster to write.

Deliverable handover email

WHEN TO USE

Sending finished work.

THE PROMPT

Write the handover email for [PROJECT] to [CLIENT]. Include: (1) what's attached/delivered, (2) a 3-bullet summary of what was done and the key decisions, (3) what I need from them next (review by [DATE], feedback), (4) the next step after approval. Tone: confident, brief. Under 150 words.

CUSTOMIZE

Attach a short Loom/voice note for complex deliverables.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A handover that makes 'approve this' the only next step.

Case study from a finished project

WHEN TO USE

After a successful project.

THE PROMPT

Turn this project into a case study: client [CLIENT], problem [PROBLEM], what I did [WORK], result [RESULT WITH NUMBERS]. Write it in the Problem -> Approach -> Result format, under 300 words, third person, with one pull-quote I can ask the client to confirm. End with a 1-line 'what this means for businesses like yours'.

CUSTOMIZE

Ask the client to approve the numbers before publishing.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A case study you can put on your site and in proposals.

Retention check-in for ongoing clients

WHEN TO USE

Monthly, for retainer clients.

THE PROMPT

Write a monthly check-in message to [RETAINER CLIENT]. Structure: (1) this month's wins - name 2-3 specific things delivered, (2) one number that moved if available, (3) what's next month, (4) one question to surface anything they need. Tone: like a partner, not a vendor. Under 120 words.

CUSTOMIZE

Send it on the same day every month - consistency builds trust.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A check-in that makes retainer renewals feel obvious.

Referral request that works

WHEN TO USE

After a great delivery or a happy testimonial.

THE PROMPT

Write a referral request to [CLIENT] who just praised my work on [PROJECT]. Structure: (1) thank them for the kind words, (2) explain my business grows through introductions, (3) ask them to think of 2-3 people who could use [MY SERVICE] and offer a template I can send directly, (4) sweetener: a small reward for referrals that close (e.g. discount on next project).

CUSTOMIZE

Send it while the glow of delivery is still fresh.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A request that turns happy clients into your sales team.

Quarterly rate review

WHEN TO USE

Every 3 months.

THE PROMPT

Help me review my freelance rates. Current rate: GH¢ [AMOUNT]/[HOUR OR PROJECT]. Since my last review: [WHAT CHANGED - skills, demand, results, inflation]. Analyze: (1) should I raise rates and by how much, (2) which existing clients to grandfather vs. raise, (3) how to announce the change without losing clients, (4) a script for telling my 2 biggest clients. Be specific.

CUSTOMIZE

Raise at least one client's rate per quarter, every quarter.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A rate strategy and the exact words to deliver it.

Automating the busywork with AI

WHEN TO USE

Once a month.

THE PROMPT

Here is a list of everything I did last week for my freelance business: [PASTE LOG]. Categorize each task as: client revenue work / admin / marketing / learning. For the admin bucket, suggest 3 specific automations (tools or prompt workflows) that could remove or shrink each task. Rank by time saved vs. setup effort. Be realistic, no pipe dreams.

CUSTOMIZE

Actually log your week - guessing defeats the purpose.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A monthly automation shortlist that buys back hours.

Handle a bad review or public complaint

WHEN TO USE

A client criticizes you publicly.

THE PROMPT

Draft a public response to this review/complaint: [PASTE REVIEW]. Rules: (1) thank them for the feedback, (2) acknowledge the specific issue without admitting fault blindly, (3) state what you've done or will do to fix it, (4) move it offline ('message me so we can sort this properly'). Never argue, never mention their tone. Under 100 words.

CUSTOMIZE

Wait 30 minutes before posting so it's calm, not reactive.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A response that makes you look professional to everyone watching.

Personal brand statement

WHEN TO USE

Refreshing your bio, site or LinkedIn.

THE PROMPT

Write my freelance brand statement. I help [TARGET] achieve [OUTCOME] through [MY METHOD/SERVICE]. My proof: [RESULTS]. My differentiator: [WHAT MAKES ME WEIRD/UNIQUE]. Write 3 versions: 10 words, 50 words, 150 words. Each must pass this test: would a stranger in my industry read it and remember me tomorrow?

CUSTOMIZE

The differentiator should be specific - 'I work with Ghanaian e-commerce brands' beats 'I'm passionate about results'.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

A brand statement with versions for every surface you publish on.
